The Minnesota DFL staff offices in rural communities throughout the year, not just before elections.

Explanation:

Many young women and men have families, jobs, or responsibilities that preclude them from traveling to St. Paul for trainings. Older people aren't always able to make the long drives. We could come closer to achieving diversity in the age and gender of the people that are volunteers in our areas.

Rural communities absolutely need consistent and caring staff that can help us generate enthusiasm for the DFL agenda. The presence of staffers closer to us will promote the idea that the DFL values us, even though we have less population.
